Taylor & Francis UK Journals names Cadmus' KGL their Top Supplier for 2009

Columbia, MD (February 19, 2010) – Cadmus Communications, a Cenveo company, today announced that KnowledgeWorks Global Limited (KGL), a wholly-owned subsidiary of Cadmus, was named as the top supplier in 2009 by Taylor & Francis (T&F) UK Journals for overall performance. Publishing nearly 1,200 academic journals and 3,000 books annually, Taylor & Francis (established in London in 1798) is now one of the world's largest and most successful academic publishers'. The partnership between T&F and KGL has been successfully working for nearly six years and has kept pace with the evolving needs of T&F's publishing program.

When asked about KGL's performance, Lawrence A. Walton, UK Journals Production Director at Taylor & Francis stated:

"This partnership is a good example of a perfectly synchronized customer–supplier relationship, enabling us to deliver our products to our end users with the utmost efficiency, quality and timeliness. KGL has been actively involved in contributing towards key issues in our production strategy with notable innovation and commitment by taking full advantage of their highly developed industry knowledge and technical ability.

T&F has noticed over the years that when technology evolves, so does KGL. Their considerable aptitude and foresight and ability to outperform, offering the best service at fair prices in an overwhelmingly competitive market, makes them stand out by far. T&F monitors every aspect of our suppliers' performance in detail on a regular monthly and annual basis, and KGL is nearly always top or in the top flight. The KGL and T&F staff working relationship is extremely good too, and adapting to a fully automated workflow comes with ease. Every individual at KGL contributes enormously towards the success of the business and ultimately the success of T&F."
